STORY OF Bukit Batok

Bukit Batok was the battleground for some of the fiercest fighting during World War II. It then endured three decades of granite blasting in support of Singapore's development. Today, Bukit Batok is surrounded by serenity. Nestled amidst three nature parks, the laidback enclave is finally enjoying a well-deserved tranquility.

Granite mining also made Little Guilin – the heart of Bukit Batok – a picturesque 42-hectare park iconised by a majestic granite peak overlooking a serene lake. We thank our city planners for preserving its beauty and transforming the former quarry into a sanctuary for picnickers, fitness seekers and romantics.

More mystical than Little Guilin is how Bukit Batok got its name. According to a chief of the tiny Javanese village of Gassing, 'batok' is Javanese for coconut, which used to grow abundantly in the area. Some believe that 'batok' evolved from 'batu', Malay for stone, describing the town's granite hills. One thing's for sure, we can safely rule out any modern theories as Bukit Batok was named in maps from the early 1900s.

From breathtaking geological formations to the Former Ford Factory, Bukit Batok's significance in Singapore's history will never be lost in translation. Take it in at the peak where views of Marina Bay Sands seamlessly blend the past and present. There is no better place to immerse in it all than CSC @ Bukit Batok.

THE Clubhouse

On 15 June 2007, the late former President Mr S. R. Nathan officiated the opening of CSC @ Bukit Batok. Today, the clubhouse is proudly a 'Made for Families' venue with family-friendly amenities and features such as family showering cubicles and nursing rooms. CSC @ Bukit Batok also achieved the BCA Green Mark Gold Plus certification which reinforces our commitment to leaving a positive impact on its surroundings and community.

Bukit Batok WWII Memorial Site
↳ Lorong Sesuai

Iconic twin radio transmission towers stand today in the spot where a Japanese memorial and allied POW memorial were constructed side by side. Both were destroyed following the war, but the original steps leading to the site remain.

Former Ford Factory
↳ 351 Upper Bukit Timah Road

This museum preserves photographs, documents and artefacts chronicling the events that led up to the fall of Singapore during World War II. It holds historical significance as the site where the British officially surrendered to Japanese forces in 1942.
